

library-learning resource center resources impact instruction

William C. and Lula B. Ford Library existed for the benefit of the students as they made use of the abundance of materials to excel in their classes. The library offered the perfect atmosphere for students to study and focus. Everything from newspapers and magazines to books and computers were made accessible to students that required them; the library held a collection of over thirty-six thousand resources that served the purpose of helping students further their education. MAGNOLIA, the online resource for literature, made a huge impact by given students access to articles, essays, and journals to enhance their learning experience.

The written word was not the only source of assistance to students. The Student Success Center supplied tutors in English, math, and science to students who were struggling in their studies. These helpful tutors guaranteed each student success, and instructors and librarians pointed students in the right direction with an endless supply of educational resources. During their experience, students were consumed in a beneficial sea of knowledge when they made use of the library's extensive materials.

by Madison VanNess and Eva-Marie Luter

above: Logan Larrimore studies for an algebra test; top left: Reed Thompson finishes his English essay; top right: Atley Gilbert browses the school website; opposite page: Tori Faust catches up on the latest Southwest news by reading the Pine Burr; right: Jack Hilton completes his online homework.

